

Justin Boardman <justin@justinboardman.com>

A thing decided

2 messages

Phillip Cosby <phillip.cosby@gmail.com>
To: Justin Boardman <justin@justinboardman.com>

Thu, Sep 3, 2020 at 8:08 AM

Hi Justin, any movement on the grand jury petition? I thought of this legal precedent as problematic to your efforts. Similar to double jeopardy. Thanks Phillip

"Res judicata" is a Latin term meaning "a thing decided". It is a common law doctrine meant to prevent relitigation of cases between the same parties regarding the same issues and preserve the binding nature of the court's decision. Once a final judgment has been reached in a lawsuit, subsequent judges who are presented with a suit that is identical to or substantially the same as the earlier one will apply the doctrine of res judicata to uphold the effect of the first judgment.

Res judicata does not prevent appeals to a higher court and there are limited exceptions to res judicata that allow a party to attack the validity of the original judgment in the same court. These exceptions--usually called collateral attacks--are typically based on procedural or jurisdictional issues, based on the lack of a court's authority or jurisdiction to issue the judgment.

Sent from my iPhone

Justin Boardman <justin@justinboardman.com>
To: Phillip Cosby <phillip.cosby@gmail.com>

Thu, Sep 3, 2020 at 8:33 AM

Good Morning!! There hasn't been anything decided as of yet. We did get word that we had the right amount of signatures. We needed 335 turned in 425 or something like that. Came back at 336!! hahaha by 1 !!

Very interesting on the "res judicata", everything makes me so nervous.

I'm attaching a photo of Madison's wounds around her neck. I just can't see how anything is consensual after these are inflicted without warning etc. I know I'm preaching to the choir here, but still !!!

UGH!!

J

[Quoted text hidden]

--

Justin Boardman
Boardman Consulting & Training
(801) 231-0881 | justin@justinboardman.com
www.justinboardman.com

Create your own email signature

2-11-18 1:16am.JPG
1609K